

A Note on Net Neutrality

“.. and suggested that no-blocking and no-unreasonable-discrimination rules might be permissible if Internet service providers could engage in individualized bargaining.”

This is from the report. This is precisely the kind of thing that cannot happen. ISPs must all abide by the same rules, at the same time. This is a utility and a platform. It has thrived until recent attempts to find new ways to exploit this technology have taken hold. I urge you: do not play this game. Leave the rules as they are. The consequences are minimal.